Product Description

The redundant Ethernet adapters are used across the entire system and on a common network that is fault-tolerant. A network like this is resilient and it can be used without any additional hardware components.

Besides that, the 1715 redundant modules that are used with an adapter base such as the 1715-A2A are built with innovative and intelligent technologies that provide top-level diagnostics.

The diagnostics features include monitoring of the health of the module and performing multiple samples of a single signal to warn about potential issues. These issues can arise from current irregularities, short circuits, and sudden rate-of-change or thresholds.

The 1715-adapter base for redundant I/O systems can be used for most critical applications since it is super flexible, and it has features that are not available with other I/O platforms.
